Welcome to the Family

A Day to Remember

We're finally alone at last Oh how I've waited for this day to come There's just something about you that rubs me wrong You're not worth my attention I built this with my own two hands If you could spare me the time Stop using me as your next misconception

I don't believe that everything you've known about me is gone forever And I won't forget the days that we spent forever, it haunts me

I don't believe that everything you've known about me is gone forever And I won't forget the days that we spent forever, it haunts me

It won't be long before you meet your end You're nothing more than a passing trend So keep those cameras rolling You think I wouldn't remember? You thought that I would lose faith in myself You can spare me the lies You don't believe in me Your life's a contradiction

I don't believe that everything you've known about me is gone forever And I won't forget the days that we spent forever, it haunts me

I don't believe that everything you've known about me is gone forever And I won't forget the days that we spent forever, it haunts me

We draw the line at being in your life Here's to the man of the hour We'll cast out problems aside Cheers to your future, may they bury you alive

Move!

I don't believe that everything you've known about me is gone forever And I won't forget the days that we spent forever, it haunts me

I don't believe that everything you've known about me is gone forever And I won't forget the days that we spent forever, it haunts me
