Sleeper In Metropolis

As a sleeper in metropolis You are insignificance Dreams become entangled in the system

Environment moves over the sleeper: Conditioned air Conditions sedated breathing The sensation of viscose sheets on naked flesh Soft and warm But lonesome in the blackened ocean of night

Confined in the helpless safety of desires and dreams We fight our insignificance The harder we fight The higher the wall

Outside the cancerous city spreads Like an illness It's symptoms In cars that cruise to inevitable destinations Tailed by the silent spotlights Of society created paranoia

No alternative could grow Where love cannot take root No shadows will replace The warmth of your contact

Love is dead in metropolis All contact through glove or partition What a waste The City -A wasting disease
