Once upon a time a very handsome prince was walking along Dead Man's Trail. Morning had just about broken and the wings of tin y birds cut through the rays of the sun, casting slithering sha dows as they went about their pleasure. The handsome prince was preparing to engage in this splendour, when all of a sudden he noticed a beautiful and quite voluptuous maiden travelling tow ards him in slow motion. "Oh my god," thought the handsome prin ce with shameful excitement, "she's incredible and so very... sti mulating."

As the beautiful maiden approached him, he gathered all of his resources, plucked up courage, and gave her one of his special curtseys that would hopefully see him in with a chance, when he realised she was very tearful if not completely crushed. The h andsome prince swallowed a wave of guilt as the beautiful maide n now openly stood before him, sobbing her heart out. Realising something was terribly wrong, the handsome prince put all of h is hang-ups on the shelf and asked: "What are you so inconceiva bly sad about if I may be so bold to enquire?" The beautiful ma iden gave a big sigh, which seemed to last a lifetime, as the h and some prince sat on the edge of his metaphorical seat in prep aration for her answer. She announced: "I've just seen my thera pist, who's convinced I have a borderline personality disorder with narcissistic traits, which means I'll be unhappy all my li fe as nobody will be able to measure up to the fantastically hi gh standards that I just can't help but impose on them."

The handsome prince's heart exploded with joy, as in this momen t he fell strangely and completely in love. "Why that's outrage ous, who is this doctor of misery?" The beautiful maiden had br oken into the tiniest of smiles, and on seeing she had the hand some prince by the short and curlies she began to weave a littl e magic here and a little magic there. "I've never met anyone l ike you before. Not only are you compassionate, you're also ver y handsome. I've lost my purse and the keys to my hovel and it looks like storm and I was wondering..." The Handsome Prince flou ndered slightly, then ejaculated: "You're so very beautiful, I think I might die if I don't invite you to my castle at the end of this trail." "Would you like to kiss me my handsome prince? " His knees began to knock as he lent towards the voluptuous ma iden in implicit expectation. When they kissed, the handsome pr ince felt a wave of nausea and a pain in his chest as blood beg an to now pour from it, and the tiny birds dipped in the mornin g light and said "goodbye" to the handsome prince, who folded i nto a heap on Dead Man's Trail, the beautiful maiden exclaiming : "Ah, there is one born every minute."