Bathory

As the night divides the day : the dark will come to everyone fear will strike the hearts of all : the hearts of all both old and young the fool may be carefree : unknown to him the troubles upon his masters brow but death us all will grasp with hand so cold to pull us down And so the sun is low again : along horizon a crimson blaze soon the dusk us all embrace : the shadows long as life itself but in the light of moon and stars above be sure yee everyone tomorrow new a day will dawn : none stay can the course of the wheel of sun As sure as it is true once we all shall die : true it is not al l men lives a king shall fall : a child be born : the Gods will take and Go ds will give before your time has come : do climb your mountainside on a mor ning fair and smell the fragrance carried by the wind : let it blow freel y through your hair damned he who sits still and curse woe the dark but will do not a thing to light the torch : to shed the light : for him the dark is al l within slowly across the sky the golden disc of life it tumbles on the wheel of life and light : rebirth : the seasons : behold th e wheel of sun
