Feral Children

Beth Orton

Feral children in the pouring rain For every constellation she might navigate again Each and ever line she might wear in time Baptized by the rain and euphoria of pain

Could kiss or punch, sober or drunk Lifted way high or taken down deep Into blue space where the rules change

Feral children know how to survive Feral children can fight for their lives Feral children hear what no one knows There's no words for the infinity of ghosts The infinity of ghosts

Hold on, hold on Holding back the sea seems unlikely She'll tell you I can forgive you But I can't forget you And you won't You know you won't forget me

Hold on, hold on Holding back the fire seems to flame desire Try parting the water, crossing the sea She'll tell you I can forgive you But I can't forget you And you won't You know you won't forget me You know you won't forget me You know you won't forget me
