

Desert Drought

Cast

even if you work it out the problem still remains just like a desert drought the remedy remains intact but falls upon deaf ears that refuse to react oblivious to laws of consequential fact you show me when to (what you give is what you get) you show me how to respond (what you give is what you get) you show me when to react (what you give is what you get) you show me when (what you give is what you get) the image that remains in view is one of isolation in a crowded room surgeons note they could remove but that would leave me left with just an open wound you find myself receding through my own vacuum the way some people demonstrate intentions tend to precede choices that we make the way some people operate they spend their time promoting counterfeit that's fake they'll try to sell you bread when baby it's half baked
