Silence, and the Firmament Withdrew

Dark Tranquillity

Make all the cold trees mourn Their branches frozen in sightless motion Waving, reaching for the whipping rain

There was silence
And the firmament withdrew
Revealing all, shapelessly and swiftly
In carmine and crimson stood flaming the sky
The relics of myths that exploded and died

Dismantle the sun and stars in their rise And rend from the skyline The black in our eyes

The skyline so empty
All but one, nonexistent

Words were not, nor gesture, thought or life The skydancers laid slain and old The firmament in perpetual withdrawal
