She's Not There Anymore

Delbert McClinton

I was with a king in a never-better land A pastel place called "Mi Amor" My every wish fulfilled by loving hands But she's not there anymore

I tasted wine on her passionate lips The way she danced across the floor These are a few of the things I miss But she's not there anymore

The fragrant pillow where she once laid her head The sound of footsteps on the stair The open book where she once sat and read But still she's not there

The fragrant pillow where she once laid her head The sound of footsteps on the stair The open book where she once sat and read But still she's not there

I walk alone these lonely streets at night No one awaits me at my door Like a broken string of pearls, so goes my life She's not there anymore