Flux of Pink Indians

Song for Them

the wind blows the baby cries people die deaths are untold land is desolate nothing here grows people living for the sight of a food bowl trapped in existence it's hard to think that such people really exist hard to believe their plight is accepted when money so wasted could be re-directed they're not some race that don't feel pain starvation is something you don't become immune to