Some people never love

Some keep a chain of withered hearts

Some leave a trail of lovers

Like old abandoned cars

Me, I've lit a thousand candles Flame of hope at both ends Waiting for someone who Never did come back again

Said a prayer And there was you

You lay your cool cross across this blistered heart You turned a light on In a corner that's always been dark

You loved me when I was not kind When my soul was fire and ice You pointed out the diamonds That only felt like stones to me

Said a prayer And there was you

Be the last thing these eyes see When I am called from this earth Be the kiss that testifies Louder than final words
Be the air I cling to when I leave Then my final prayer will be

One more look, one more taste, one more breath

Some people count their money Some people count their friends Some just collect their tears In pillows where all their dreams end

Moments are my silver
Days are my best companion
Years are sweeter than dreams
When every one is given
To a prayer, and you

Be the last thing these eyes see When I am called from this earth Be the kiss that testifies Louder than final words
Be the air I cling to when I leave Then my final prayer will be

One more look, one more taste, one more breath
