

Don't you see we have something here?
Which I will call not philosophy, except in the most ancient sense of basic curiosity

Never remember
You're perfect
or anything you'd like.

Sorry, so helpless,
so help you,
anyway you'd like.

Take your medicine

Never remember,
You're perfect,
or anything you'd like.

Sorry, so helpless,
So help you,
anyway you'd like.

Take your medicine.

...Scales,
and all sorts of what we would now call scientific instruments.
Because science used to be called natural philosophy.
Because, as Aristotle says,
The beginning of philosophy is wonder.
Philosophy is man's expression of curiosity about everything,
His attempt to make sense of the world,
primarily through his intellect-
That is to say his faculty for thinking.
