His Eyes

Steven Curtis Chapman

Sometimes His eyes were gentle and filled with laughter And sometimes they cried Sometimes there was a fire of Holy anger In Jesus' eyes

But the eyes that saw hope in the hopeless That saw through the fault to the need Are the same eyes that look down from heaven Into the deepest part of you and me

And His eyes are always upon us His eyes never close in sleep And no matter where you go You will always be in His eyes In His eyes

Sometimes His voice comes calling like rolling thunder Or like driving rain And sometimes His voice is quiet and we start to wonder If He knows our pain

But He who spoke peace to the water Cares more for our hearts than the waves And the voice that once said, "You're forgiven." Still says, "You're forgiven", today Today

Sometimes I look above me when stars are shining And I feel so small How could the God of heaven and all creation Know I'm here at all

But then in the silence He whispers: "My child, I created you too and you're my most precious creation I even gave my Son for you."

And His eyes are always upon you His eyes never close in sleep and no matter where you go you will always be in His eyes no matter where you go you will always be in His eyes

Sometimes His eyes were gentle and filled with laughter
