The Church

There's a distant light shining over you tonight You've been transformed, you'll always be my storm In the Tuscan dusk you're swooning under moons of musk You touch the texture of the tiles and miles away A visitor waits for you to show You've got to go In the plum sun dunes rippling to a frail tune You've been conveyed, you'll always be my lifetimes blade Along the alpine drive uncertain how to be alive You love the fragments of a smile and miles away A courier invokes your name you know You've got to go And another heart breaks, you're wasting all the time it takes You've been assigned, you'll never be too far behind Wait for a bus to come, you know another verse to hum You thrust the windows for a while and miles away Your servants searching high and low You've got to go You better go
