Even Though

The Devil Wears Prada

Even though you felt that way I was with the hurricane Looking out on what I made

It was then I felt the hammer Adjusted aperture, chasing light I foraged through the ground I was losing my sight Disconnected Uncorrected New beds in new hotels Set to remind me of our shared history

Even though you felt that way I was with the hurricane Looking out on what I made Even though you told me months before Some things I couldn't say Looking out on what I made

A story more intact I'll try to provide But with the constant mist The haze to coincide Misrepresented Overextended A new desk in a new office Set to remind me of our shared history

Even though you felt that way I was with the hurricane Looking out on what I made Even though you told me months before Some things I couldn't say Looking out on what I made

The air was too heavy All struggle who breathe it in The ropes too tight Compounding while we sleep

The air was too heavy The ropes too tight The air was too heavy The ropes too tight

And even though you felt that way I was with the hurricane Looking out on what I made On what I made

And even though you told me months before Some things I couldn't say Looking out on what I made
