The Tree

The Incredible String Band

I had a tree in the dream hills where my childhood lay And I'd go there in the wide, long days And my tree would listen to all that I'd say

And the sun was shining brightly And the sky was smiling And the sun was shining brightly And the sky was smiling, oh

Then one day when the world had put me in its tomb And my life was just an empty room I went to my tree and I sat there in my gloom And the light was fading dimly and the sky was crying, oh

Then my tree bent its branches low down to the ground And its green leaves shrouded up my mind And I left the world somewhere behind And I didn't not know what I would find

And the sun was shining brightly And the sky was smiling Oh, the sun was shining brightly And the sky was smiling
