St. John the Gambler

Townes Van Zandt

When she had twenty years she turned to her mother Saying mother, I know that you'll grieve
But I've given my soul to St. John the gambler
Tomorrow comes time to leave

For the hills cannot hold back my sorrow forever And dead men lie deep 'round the door The only salvation that's mine for the asking So mother, think on me no more

An' winter held high 'round the mountains breast And the cold of a thousand snows Lay heaped upon the forests leaf But she dressed in calico

For a gambler likes his women fancy
Fancy she would be
And the fire of her longing would keep 'way the cold
And her dress was a sight to see

But the road was long beneath the feet She followed her frozen breath In search of a certain St. John the gambler Stumbling to her death

She heard his laughter right down from the mountains And danced with her mothers tears

To a funeral drawn a calico
'Neath the cross of twenty years
