

The Price You'll Pay

A Call to Sincerity

I held onto you
For as long as I could
But today you fell away from me
I stood on the edge of this cliff, gazing for a sign
But there was nothing.
I waited for the rain to wash me from the grief
You let settled down this place when I was sleeping
The worst get worse when you breathe

There's nothing left for me here
The air has never felt that cold
The regrets of a father to his son
To my ear will never been heard

I've already forget your voice
How your mouth get severally deformed
When lies were told, you're a liar to us all

I held onto you
For as long as I could
But today you'll fall on your fucking knees
I stood on the edge of this cliff, gazing to the sky
Waiting for my eyes to be dry
Your body melt in the sunset
As the trigger have burst your head
I'm awaiting the perfect moment
For you to suck the bullet

I've already forget your voice
How your mouth get severally deformed
When lies were told, you're a liar to us all