I opened my eyes, just like I always do
But when I think of you
My day is off
I'm sick of it, I hate you

But I miss you
And I need you
More than before
Now it's embarrassing to even cry, this timing
What can I call it? A worn-out longing

I think I drank too much coffee

I can't sleep
Behind the tossing and turning
Beneath my pillow is your face

So I miss you
And I need you
More than before
Now it's embarrassing to even cry, this timing
What can I call it? A worn-out longing

The good days
The so-so days
They become no different from any other day
It was just a simple happening

The good days
The so-so days
They become no different from any other day
Just whatever days

Only dust piles up
Please save me
On things that were the most beautiful to me
At one point

I miss you
(Still I miss you)
And I need you
To be by my side
Now it's awkward to even call out to you
What can I call it? Such a resentful longing

The good days
The so-so days
They become no different from any other day
It was just a simple happening

Words I believed in Days that we promised
They just scattered
And became just whatever
