Even though my white shoes were covered in mud
The park's swing, my secretly keep kitten
Played until dusk I heard your voice calling me
The tasty smell of dinner and the stretching shadows

Your back was far broader than anyone
Your hands were the gentlest in the world
You seemed so tired but still gave me a ride on shoulders
Even sunset looked so close, that I thought I can touch it

My memories are so beautiful
And I've always been longing for them
Here I am, crying by myself
Because it's an inheritance habit of yours

Sunday morning, burnt toast
Mom was laughing over the shirt that fell to the floor
And once it has become Monday
You pedalled hard than anyone ever while riding me on the back of your rusted bicycle

My memories are so beautiful
And I've always been longing for them
Here I am, crying by myself
Because it's an inheritance habit of yours

Just for a bit longer
For a bit longer
If I could stay by your side
I wonder, what should I say?

Farewell
Thank you
For all your love

That's all the common words
I could say to you
