

Balancing Game

Alec Benjamin

You can't have glory without the pain
You can't have freedom without the chains
It's a fragile existence, a delicate system
This life is a balancing game

I thought I could tip the scales, cheat the game
Have the sun without the rain
Take your love
And not exchange my heart for yours
I guess that it's me to blame

So this is what I've found
From the bridges I've burned down
That it all comes back around
Now I know

You can't have glory without the pain
You can't have freedom without the chains
It's a fragile existence, a delicate system
This life is a balancing game

So then I called you up to make amends
Said, "Take me back,"
And you said, "Yes."
But now I know just how it ends
You played the game, like me, it was all pretend

So this is what I've learnt
You can't take and not return
Because one day you'll get burned, and now I know

You can't have glory without the pain
You can't have freedom without the chains
It's a fragile existence, a delicate system
This life is a balancing game
