

Seasons

Alexz Johnson

If I could only see the future
And what we have in store
Will I lose you like my sister
Or get caught inside a war?
In this moment all my worries
Seem miles and miles away

And I see color in the garden
It's floating through the air
I can hear you in the kitchen
Singing blues above the stairs
In this moment all my worries
Seem miles and miles away

'Cause there's a season to grow
A season for change
Season to try and keep trying again
You and I are the same
There's a season for this pain

There's a season to lose
A season for truth
A season to cry
There's a season to die
There's no reason to hide
What you're feeling inside
There's a reason in the seasons of your life

Whether driven by a dream, or driven by desires
Constant as the river, all destructive as a fire
There's one thing we have in common:
Time's passing us by

It's giving when we least expect it
Then takes it all away
In a moment there's a flower
From a seed you threw away
And when you feel like running
It teaches you to stay

There's a season to grow
A season for change
A season to try and keep trying again
You and I are the same
There's a season for this pain

There's a season to lose
A season for truth
A season to cry
There's a season to die
There's no reason to hide
What you're feeling inside
There's a reason in the seasons of your life

A reason in the seasons of your life

(Wherever I go, you'll always surround me)

Wherever I go, yeah!
(No reason to cry, you'll always surround me)
Don't you cry!
Surround me
Surround me

If I could only see the future
What we have in store
Will I lose you like my sister
Or get caught inside a war?
In this moment all my worries
Seem miles and miles away