

Who Do You Call

Alicia Moffet

My notebook is full of broken hearts
And every time I call my mom, I pretend that everything is fine
Sometimes I wish my car didn't start
So I don't have to go home to everything I'm trying to hide from

Who do you call when you're losing it all
And your mom is out of good advice
And your dad is always out of sight?
And who do you call when you're losing control
And you're crying on the bathroom floor
Staring at someone that you used to know?

I woke up at 2 p.m. again
With no missed calls from all the people that like to claim that they're my friends
I feel like an old trophy on the shelf
Collecting dust on what used to be, the better version of myself, so

Who do you call when you're losing it all
And your mom is out of good advice
And your dad is always out of sight?
And who do you call when you're losing control
And you're crying on the bathroom floor
Staring at someone that you used to know?

When you're here, it's like you're not around
Will you hear me out?
Now my tears, they don't fill my cup
I just need, I need you, just hear me out

Who do you call when you're losing it all
And your mom is out of good advice
And your dad is always out of sight?
And who do you call when you're losing control
And you're crying on the bathroom floor
Staring at someone that you used to know?
