

Hey do you still remember
The red color of that evening sky
Like the whole world was burning right before our eyes
Back when we made a promise
Our words carried off into the wind
We held each other tight back then

The shadows
That hide behind your smile
You put on that mask hoping I won't ask
So I don't
Pretending I don't see
The shadows smiling back at me

I was always waiting for you
To bring me some kind of news
When deep inside I knew
Those cold and long endless nights
The mornings that will never arise
I can see them all clearly before me

Hey do you still remember
The red color of that evening sky
Like the whole world was burning right before our eyes
Back when we made a promise
One we knew that we could never keep
It vanishes upon the breeze

There's no sound
No color I can see
No warmth in this room
It was gone too soon
And I've found
That life has worn me out
More times than I could ever count

The reason I drew to you
Was because you hated lies too
But that was far from truth
It's all too overwhelming
'Cause you deceived me so skillfully
Don't know why it had to come to goodbye

We both waved at each other
Saying "See you soon, another time"
But it would seem that day would never see the light
Even though it was a lie
It's the kindest one I'll ever find
I won't forget

Hey do you still remember
The red color of that evening sky
Like the whole world was burning right before our eyes
Back when we made a promise
One we knew that we could never keep
But it lives on in you and me