

Your Child

Amanda Cook

I am worn and weary, what I've known as home is gone
Everything I trusted can't be found
And I'm left here singing a simple song
My heart is heavy

Thought I knew everything, I was wrong
And I put my own way above Your love
All I wanted was a place to belong
But the place I found was wrong

How can I remain Your child
When my sin left me broken and I fell to the ground?
Everything I've known came crashing down
How can I remain Your child?

This is a road well traveled by many before
That has brought me beaten to the redemption door
Now my soul is knocking, I will sit and wait
To hear You say, to hear You say

That I will remain Your child
Though the world will take its toll on me and I fall to the ground
And everything I've known comes crashing down
I will remain Your child

I will remain Your child
Though the world may take my breath away and I fall to the ground
And everything I've known can come crashing down
I will remain Your child
Oh, I will remain Your child
