American Steel

everybody's just filled with hate, but ill always offer a clean slate oh how i've tried to stick up for you but you always fk up something new the bickering the snickering is old i can't see you thinking twice as another drama unfolds and your life... wastes, wastes away fear is in the mirror, you're just passing by we all make mistakes but you've never really owned up to it and all your half-assed apologies don't ever really add up to shit your self service is blatant and we've served all your purposes you wonder how you missed all the answers, without trying to scratch the surface and your life... is that fear in the mirror is this another shattered life, is this the amount of all the broken promises and lies the more i try not to let you slip the more it feels like i'm chasing first high wasted my love, smoked my empathy angered my sympathy, love and wisdom they pass you by