Amorphis

The night thickened into black earth
The ground sparked under my feet
I didn't know the stars had tumbled down
And that earth had turned into sky

I should have understood
I should have seen it coming
The signs on the road had changed
The fires on the mountain died
I should have understood
I should have seen it coming
The signs on the road had changed
The fires on the mountain died

I felt ascending but I really sunk
Everything had turned upside down
As I was struggling to the mountain peak
I had dug into the grave of all hope

I should have understood
I should have seen it coming
The signs on the road had changed
The fires on the mountain died
I should have understood
I should have seen it coming
The signs on the road had changed
The fires on the mountain died

I did not follow the bear-star
I shun advice of my brothers
I did not study the signs of the heavens
I silenced the words of my sisters

I should have understood
I should have seen it coming
The signs on the road had changed
The fires on the mountain died
I should have understood
I should have seen it coming
The signs on the road had changed
The fires on the mountain died

Why did I shun the advice of brothers?
(The fires on the mountain died)
Why did I silenced the words of sisters?
(The fires on the mountain died)
