Don't try to wake me up

Even if the sun really does come out tomorrow

Don't believe anything you say anymore

In the morn, in the morning

Bricks to this old house are breaking Steel would have weathered but now forlorner It's alarming how loud the silence screams No warn, no warn, no warning

Addictions fill the table where the family used to sit And conversate, conversate to the sounds To the sounds of a record player with it's jumping needle And the lights that grow dim over time

With downcast eyes
There's more to living than being alive
With downcast eyes
There's more to living than being alive, whoa

Are you where you thought you'd be? So beautiful and only twenty-three Opposition rests in the hearts With no, with no opportunity

It's not that we don't talk
Its just no one really listens and honesty fades
Like a politician, lost in the course
All smiles and no one remembers our names

With downcast eyes There's more to living than being alive With downcast eyes There's more to living than being alive

With downcast eyes There's more to living than being alive With downcast eyes There's more to living than being alive

Don't try to wake me up

Even if the sun really does come out tomorrow

Don't believe anything I say anymore

In the morn, in the morning

With downcast eyes There's more to living than being alive With downcast eyes There's more to living than being alive

With downcast eyes There's more to living than being alive With downcast eyes There's more to living than being alive
