And I wanna remember this night

And how my words never came out right

The wind blows through your hair As you're walking people stare Up the block and down the street to North King's highway And there's a beating in my chest And it's seeming to suggest That before this day is through it might go my way And so I sit back in my seat I scribble down something that's sweet about a boy A girl An endless stretch of scenery 'Cause it's like falling to your knees before a stranger on the street I did it just the other day You should have seen me Oh And I wanna remember this night And how my words never came out right It's just my patience that keeps me alive Just like all those pretty lights Just like all the pretty lights in the sky There's something to be said about the colors in your head And how they mix to form the perfect shade of sadness Not because of things I've done or any of the songs I've sung It's just the story of our lives We wish we had this Oh And I wanna remember this night And how my words never came out right It's just my patience that keeps me alive Just like all those pretty lights Just like all the pretty lights in the sky And I remember we stayed up way past your bedtime Up on the second floor Down by my sliding door Just innocent kids in a victimless crime Trapped in a metaphor HHping for something more And I wanna remember this night And how my words never came out right It's just my patience that keeps me alive Just like all those pretty lights Just like all the pretty lights in the sky

It's just my patience that keeps me alive Just like all those pretty lights Just like all the pretty lights in the sky In the sky Just like all those pretty lights

In the sky

Just like all the pretty lights in the sky

Just like all those pretty lights Just like all the pretty lights in the sky
