Mirages

Andromeda

I could have pushed you out that day
That would have been the easy way
Watch you fly down that hundred meter fall
I wouldn't care at all

Falling, falling, drowning
Inhaling and you're screaming
Screaming Pleading don't go

Mirages, as I hurt you in my mind As the memories unwind Mirages, as you led me to believe In things that only you conceive

Why do you play that vicious game I ask myself most every day So high, that hundred meter fall I turn around and there you are

Falling, falling, drowning
Inhaling and I'm screaming
Screaming Pleading Bleeding

Victoria falls were much too real It's beauty false though now I see Please try to explain What was the aim, what was the gain No matter how I try to wash it off The stains remain

(We are gathered here today
To say our last farewells
We fell so hard down that hundred meter fall
Now, only stains of us remain)

Mirages, as you twisted with my mind As you told me I was blind Mirages, well constructed to deceive The trusty and naive Mirages, as you offered no reprieve From the hell you had achieved Mirages, as I finally could see That there was nothing to conceive