Blessing In Disguise

Annie Haslam

Every drop of water Descending like a pearl Lays upon the silken skin Of this perfect girl The breeze around her body Moved upwards to her face It held on like a baby That found it's resting place Voices from the night before Cannot be denied Suddenly revealing All the pain inside Entering a well of thoughts All her fears subside All the bad things turning to A blessing in disguise She was the faintest flower Washed in by the tide Sending silent messages To the world outside Her face began to soften Her lips took on a smile The people who had loved her Came rushing to her side Voices from the night before Cannot be disguised Suddenly revealing All the pain inside Entering a well of thoughts All her fears subside All the bad things turning to A blessing in disguise