She'll Be Waiting

Anthony Phillips

She would have wanted you to make it
She would have wanted you to be strong
She would have hoped that you could take it
And fill your days with sweeter songs

And though it seems right now that you can't go on
You find the strength somehow to get through
For it will all make sense in the final hour
She'll be waiting for you

She would have wanted you to live it wild
And take the fruit from life's rich tree
She would have hoped that you could teach her child
All the things that she believed

And though it seems right now that you can't go on
You find the strength somehow to get through
For it will all make sense in the final hour
She'll be waiting for you

The sun is setting now, the road's ahead
It may be full of twists and snares
And you will always think of things she said
And see her face in a thousand stares

And though it seems right now that you can't go on
You find the strength somehow to get through
For it will all make sense in the final hour
She'll be waiting for you
