Master of Disguise

Arcturus

("No! this face is only a mask a wicked ornament, Illuminated by an exquisite grimace, Look and see, atrociously contoroled, The real head, and the sincere face Turned back under the shadow of the face which lies." - Charles Baudelaire)

He is profanity in sancitity`s guise An alias assumed I do recognize In their eyes , his cause when enticing and cunning in impact is still a criminal and evil act.

So look for him vainly, He, the incarnation of evil: And by arrangements of magickal nature He turns unrecognizable even to the experienced eye.

You obsessively pursue him Falling to see, that was why he came to be one who annihilates with such impunity

He appears your friend, but the Saint hides many Satans He`s contemptous, you know of your Godgiven stupidities He calls you in question which affected modesty and create of you an object of derision

You think him to be the pariah whom company does exclude
But in the midst of all frenzy
He is - feasting in a transitory mood

Passion is strict lord
He is also its humble slave
When bereft of common ways,
He strides before you on water
He makes clowns of kings, charms the guests, rides the ball Is the master of disguise

Prince of the thousandfold face the charming jester's smile which invites reason to demise, and imaginations rise
Inscrutable yes, venting his spleen Somewhere night and day between
Is the master of disguise
