Charon

Audrey Horne

How often do you ask yourself this What's the value of my broken soul? Could I trade it in for better days now? Would it make it any easier?

Purgatory 'cause of little white lies Purgatory 'cause of half told truths Who pays for the ferry ticket? And just how deep is the river Styx You never thought of it like this

How 're you gonna get across this? How 're you gonna make it home? There's always someone stronger on the other side There's always someone better on the other side How 're you gonna get alive out of here?

So, now you need to match your stories Where were you when it all began? Did you think that you could buy your way out? Did you take this for a sink or swim?

Purgatory for your little white lies Purgatory for your half told truths All the bridges in this world won't save you Someday you're gonna realize That whatever you came here for tonight Is gonna sink you like stone

How 're you gonna get across this? How 're you gonna make it home? There's always someone stronger on the other side There's always someone better on the other side How 're you gonna get alive out of here?

Believe me when I say As far as I know there's still a chance to get out of here without sc ars And even though it hurts Chances are you'll be better off If you sail across under your true flags

How 're you gonna get across this? How 're you gonna make it home? There's always someone stronger on the other side There's always someone better on the other side How 're you gonna get alive out of here?