

Changing The World

Aya Kamiki

I want to forget you but I can't, in the deep of the misty, rainy night
I can't hear you, I can't tell you, though I can say it in my heart
I look at the deception you put together
Backs turned, nothing will change the truth

The world is turning, each new day comes
Your eyes are dry and full of happiness
The world stops, you're walking past me
How many more sadnesses will I have to count?
One, two, and many more
But still I'll keep on walking, changing the world

I look up at the sky where the clouds spread out
I hold out my hands to the scents of summer
A shadow comes up behind me and goes on ahead
And I hear a voice saying "Don't run on ahead!"

That day, as usual, we were shoulder to shoulder
Hold the seasons we spent together in your heart

The world is turning, I shout like mad, but it's no use
I want to sleep beside you
The world stops, I just stop, looking straight ahead
You told me that speaking your mind was a sign of strength
That's everything, even if it's not pretty
I'll live in my own way, changing the world

Shururira yururi, love imprints
Your hands and your voice in my heart
Shururira yururi, you pass me by
How many more sadnesses will I have to count?
One, two, and many more
But still I'll keep on walking, changing the world