Day Twelve: Trauma

Think hard, you are lying here in a hospital bed Disregard the emotions inside your head Concentrate on the real world beyond your mind It's not to late to leave your burdens behind

We won't let you go Take you down below Dark crypts of your soul Locked inside your head... You're better of dead

Locked away, she lives in isolation It's been that way, since he has gone She been through life of deprivation She depends on you, her only son

She won't let you go Keep you down below Dark crypts of your soul Locked inside your head You're better of dead

Where are you, can't you hear her calling? Nothing you can do, you have no time There is no one there, to catch her now she's falling Why should you care, you are doing fine

She won't let you go Keep you down below Dark crypts of your soul Locked inside your head You're better of dead

Now she's at rest, she finally found her peace There's no need to blame yourself You must let go, or the pain will never cease It's time to crawl out of your shell

Your mother died, the day your father left A part of you died as well Feelings of guilt will haunt you 'til the end You must fight hard to break this spell

But it hurts...

You hear her voice, from beyond her grave "Where were you son, when I needed you Is this your thanks for all the warmth I gave Did you forget what I been through?"

Then you hear his voice, cold and merciless "You're worthless fool, you let her die!" And deep within yourself, you must confess Your ways cannot be justified

By now you realize, you have to be relentless to survive
