Man I wonder - you spent the summer south
Riding bikes instead of punching time clocks.

If voices said go to Colorado - it's such a scenic place to end a story.

You'd been waking up to shit; Stood in the background watching. Couldn't tell what was in your head; You didn't say 'cause you don't like talking, no.

You, idling and counting steps left to go.
You got your radio; more the days go by, more the static drones

Stuck waiting for a couple words to bleed through. I remember you couldn't get inside. It's a long way home.

If I'm out your way I'll stop someday; think I heard someone say out West on 55.

Ask why, ask what for.

I blame it on your Saltash luck,

Your twenties, and North Dakota.
