Before I Turn

"I never knew that such evil existed
I always thought that the devil was a metaphor
For profoundly immoral and malevolent happenings
While many revelations seemed to surface tonight
The one reality I can't seem to shake
Is my discovery of how much blood the human body can hold"

I hear the tear, from the penance of a knife
He drinks a crimson filter made from loss of life
I come home to find the one I adore
Face down, lifeless on the floor
Please God, give me fortitude
For the courage I lack will stab me right in the back
Lost love, give me solitude
I give you one last goodbye as death selfishly claims you

I fear I'm falling through the cracks of hell
And now in unison the voices start to yell

"Let us in, let us in, let us in"
Bringing to surface every virtue and sin
Let me die, let me die, let me fucking die
Don't want to spend another second looking in his eye

You feeling lucky? Just watch what I'll do
Open this fucking door and let me kill you

And now they're screaming

"Let us in, let us in, let us in"
Bringing to surface every virtue and sin
Let me die, let me die, let me fucking die
Don't want to spend another second looking in his eye

I sit and stare as they pound on the door
She's face down, lifeless on the floor
I fear I'm falling through the cracks of hell
And you're the only one I can tell

Cold shrieks turn into humble cries
She speaks unto the silent night
I'm feeling apathetic, I'm feeling death
I feel that this will be the night you take your last breath
Open the door 'cause I'm ready to fight
Only one of us will survive this night
