2:30 pm, i jumped off the welfare wagon to meet you for lunch. you sit like a thai princess... cold and captivating. you divulge your latest secret. (so sinister - i cannot repeat)

from my eyes flows glacier water. from my soul, sick obscenities.

i died eating french fries in the restaurant on the corner, where you broke me heart. i cried 'cause i bit my tongue knowing the truth would wash over you like a rash.

annihilation of my self-respect and cash flow before my eyes - right here in this booth. through this blinding hatred i see a lady on my right. she winked at me and said, "run for your life!"

from my eyes flows glacier water. from my soul, sick obscenities.

i died eating french fries
in the restaurant on the corner, where you broke me heart.
i cried 'cause i bit my tongue knowing the truth would wash over you like a rash.

i hereby use my glacier water to wash away the remorse and the stain. behind these eyes i'm my mother's daughter. hard, hidden shame: and you'll never see me again!
