

The Sailor's Wife

Birdeatsbaby

The Sailor's Wife, alone one night In slumber as she bathes She dreams of ships her sailor's lip Against the ocean waves

The sailor's wife was pale and white Beauty near divine 'Oh how the sea has stolen thee' She drinks, she waits, she cries

Life is but a dream

The sailor knows that waves will grow When all is not content T he sky grows dark, a lightening spark A message must be sent

He shouts down to the sorry crew 'The sky's no longer blue A st orm is come to claim someone So pray it is not you'

Life is but a dream

The sailor's wife had bare a life Before she slipped and fell H er back was broke, and as she soaks She cannot cry for help

The sailor clings to ropes and things He won't survive for long Then crashing down upon his crown A final, parting song

Both of them sinking as death pulls the plug One in the ocean a nd one in the tub

The water's running The storm is coming The sailor is drowning, drowning
