

Between the Enemy Lines

Bloodbound

He was massive, a giant all made of stone
On the back of a horse so high, so he could reach the sky
They were out on a mission in blood and bone
On a track, on a course we fly, we hear the battle cry

Ride, win the race and stake your claim
'Cause I will rest my case when you have your place in the ground

When the giants march across the land
You can hear the thunder roar
When they break the trees and stone by hand
You can feel it to the core
Smash him into pieces
He was accidentally trapped
In the end he was saved by his son
Between the enemy lines

On the day of the duell the two collide
When he hurled his hammer high, so high into the sky
With a piece of the whetstone still inside
When his hammer the giant struck
The shattered pieces fly

Ride, win the race and stake your claim
'Cause I will rest my case when you have your place in the ground

When the giants march across the land
You can hear the thunder roar
When they break the trees and stone by hand
You can feel it to the core
Smash him into pieces
He was accidentally trapped
In the end he was saved by his son
Between the enemy lines

He had crossed the line and paid the price
Now he is spread out on the ground
Should have seen the signs of his defeat
Their secret's safe but they have led the way

When the giants march across the land
You can hear the thunder roar
When they break the trees and stone by hand
You can feel it to the core
Smash him into pieces
He was accidentally trapped
In the end he was saved by his son
Between the enemy lines

He was saved by his son
Between the enemy lines
