

C'mon Baby

Bob Schneider

They say love finds its own way home
Around the snakes inside your heart, underneath all the bones
And though the world may fold you in its pocket, you won't ever bend
Your not the type, my only love, my only true friend
And what about the girl who ran?
She ran so far away she could never find her way back home again
She tripped and fell and broke her heart
Now the only thing she does well is fall apart!
C'mon baby c'mon
And what about this starry sky?
I know I've used that tired analogy a thousand times
But it still has the same strange effect on me
I fall into the sky like I was falling into a beautiful blue sea
Just want to stop the world and hide
But theres no where to run, no place left inside
Just want to stop and catch my breath
Spend one second on this earth not scared of death!
C'mon baby c'mon
That's what I say but is it true?
The truth is everything is perfect and its not for me and you
To figure out anything at all and all we've got is time
But not much time, so fuck the brakes and get in line
I just want to make you see the light
I just want to shine as bright as Brooklyn on a Saturday night
I want to scream until I drown
I want to get so high that I never come back down!
And I know you'll never understand, I know you'll never understand
You think you know me well, you think you know me well, think again
I'm on fire and I'm insane and I'm all right

Don't stand so close 'cause you've been blinded by the light

C'mon baby c'mon
