

White Lingerie

Cris Cab

I looked as far as the eye can see
She screamed her love from the balcony
That's how she was so young and free
She wanted to believe
I told her wait at the corner store
She's lightning quick when it rains it pours
It's the kind of love cash can't afford
I wanted to believe
She's got the voice of harmony
And the mind of Socrates
When we meet it's synergy
It's only you and me
While we sleep on sacred ground
You talk about this love we found
Feel the Earth and it's spinning round
And now we both believe
She's so young, yet so old
When she heard the wedding bells
She fell in love with a fairy tale
She's so young, yet so old
When her father said
That even castles turn to sand someday
Castles turn to sand someday
Even castles turn to sand someday
White flowers and white lingerie
The marching band with the red barrettes
The parents showed on wedding day
They wanted to believe
She's walking in just like the queen
But when she falls, there was no king
The best to say he left the scene
She never wanted to believe
She's so young, yet so old
When she heard the wedding bells
She fell in love with a fairy tale
She's so young, yet so old
When her father said
That even castles turn to sand someday
Castles turn to sand someday
Even castles turn to sand someday
Oh no
This isn't how it's all supposed to be
All this can change so easily
Oh no
All that remained has washed into the sea
So she'll just take her sweet time
She's so young, yet so old
When she heard the wedding bells
She fell in love with a fairy tale
She's so young, yet so old
When her father said
That even castles turn to sand someday
Castles turn to sand someday
Castles turn to sand someday
Even castles turn to sand someday