Revenge

David Allan Coe

Judy, I feel weary now, older than a man of 33 The gates of Hell just opened, after 20 years the warden says I 'm free Revenge was all I wanted When I killed the man that took your life that day I've had my satisfaction, but the price was more Than love should have to pay

Lord knows you weren't no lady And the witnesses all swore you was to blame And the way you teased the menfolk The jury all agreed you knew no shame, knew no shame

Well I'm glad that you can't see me now You'd probably say I do not look my best Those lawyers took my money And that Louisiana road gang took the rest

And Judy I can't even conjure up your picture in my mind today Lately I've been thinkin' what a fool I was to love you anyway

Well it all seems kind of useless As I place these flowers on your grave today I don't know what I'm doing here I've forgotten all the things I came to say
