

Collision Survive

Dayseeker

One single mistake has resulted in my body breaking through the windshield

My eyes are open, and it feels like the first time I've ever seen the earth for what it could be

No promise to wake in the morning, how many seconds have I wasted and thrown away?

Every minute is a chance to be the person that you want to believe exists inside of the mess you've created

Because I think I need you to understand

This collision survived was my second chance

Awaking to this hospital bed, I exhale with closing eyes and thank god I'm alive

Crimson blood stains my hands

Don't know who's alive or dead

I remember the worst from the night

From the scar that was ripped into my, face

I swear on my life, I'll never forget this night

I see ambulance lights flash and sing

A song far too honest with me

God, hear my voice one more time

I'm the broken bone, that needs to mend and become whole

Hear my voice one more time

Never again, never again, will I sleep in the ground.

My hands are extending, so reach in and pull me out.

I inhale with brand new lungs, surviving this collision.