

Stations

Denison Witmer

i'll be waiting on your train when you come back through the western states where i left you on the platform life gets so hard but i know that you'll be fine stations make me think of my own travels all the people and places i've been through when you find that they're the same thing as the people

in places that you knew

can you promise me
you still love
what you loved
when you left?
will you promise me
you still have
what you had
when you left?

all i want is to be honest
like the seasons
as talk about that slows there's compassion that holds no words it holds no words
you feel it as you go

can you promise me
you still love
what you loved
when you left?
will you promise me
you still have
what you had
when you left?