So this is what you're made of Half of what you've always been With a future you're afraid of And a past that nearly did you in There's no running as the colors start to turn There's no hiding from the lessons you'll learn We said forever We crashed together But we knew better We though the stars we named were ours But now we're older And starting over Is so much harder this time Waiting on another life Like a city in the daylight You finally see what's underneath And I remember what it felt like You and I can't deny You're not who you used to be There's no running as the colors start to turn There's no hiding from the lessons you'll learn We said forever

We crashed together But we knew better We though the stars we named were ours But now we're older And starting over Is so much harder this time Waiting on another life In another life I could make this go away In another life I would know just what to say And it would be alright 'Cause it would be another way In another life In another life We said forever We crashed together But we knew better We though the stars we named were ours But now we're older And starting over Is so much harder this time Waiting on another life Waiting on another life But now we're older And starting over Is so much harder this time Waiting on another life