

You'd Never Know

Evan Honer

She's livin' alone
But there hasn't been a night that she's been sober
I told her friends to come back over
A third year, would rather drop out
Never wanted much of nothin'
Just a reason why her folks say she ain't enough and

A calculated tragedy that makes it somewhat clear to see
That she livin' someone else's dream
And walkin' down that Mill Avenue in the dead of night still so confused
Why she's even there?

Mentally exhausted
She don't recognize herself yet
And it's getting too much to bear
But it's hard to tell by looking at her
She seems so well put together
You'd never know

She can't recall
The last time that she spoke to both her parents
And then called but no one answers
So scared of disappointment
Seeks approval to feel important
And it kills her
And she knows it

And stumbling through a town she hates
With the guy that she forgot his name
But he doesn't mind
'Cause he only sees what she portrays
And she's never known a man to stay
After pulling back the blinds
But it's hard to tell by looking at her
She seems so well put together
You'd never know

You'd never know she keeps a bottle by her bed
Past three nights since she has slept
She lost fifteen pounds this week
And you'd never know she's still torn up about her dad
Cheating on her mom and asks
If she wouldn't say a thing

And you'd never know she's been fakin' every smile
Hasn't felt in quite awhile
And she's close to giving up

It's hard to tell by looking at her
She seems so well put together
You'd never know
Well you'd never know
