Here's Lookin' At You

Every Time I Die

Staring at a ghost across a table set for two
This is the last call before the credits roll
The charm of silver screen depression saturated in alcohol it's so seductive
Filtered through tobacco haze it's so fucking intoxicating

The way they glimmer through the grain And make dysfunction such a fashion Jimmy Stewart suicidal sex appeal The alcoholic is the last true hopeless romantic Stumbling and smelling of stale gasoline

Making James Dean speeches to an empty room Audrey left some lipstick on her cigarette in the ashtray With a note scrawled on a napkin saying, "This is glamor" This is where Hollywood cues the delusion

That everything looked this blue through Sinatra's eyes What America needs is another worthwhile overdose Celestial bodies constructed on set destined to explode in the headlines Another dry martini and a methamphetamine Godspeed Norma Jean, I hope you saved us one last sleeping pill

Play it again for me The tragedy of a track marked beauty queen The starlet in the magazine She looks all right to me Oh she looks so good to me

But there's something in the way she moves Like I want to make me want you Tonight I feel like fame, dreary and estranged I'd scratch through glass not to be without you, without you

Whole lotta shakin' going on Whole lotta shakin' going on Whole lotta shakin' going on
