She lies in her bed staring into nowhere Tears running down her face An open wound bleeding Her body turns pale Recalling the road leading away from right As the dark had appeared as light Tricked to cross the line, dragged further in Then trapped in a swirl of wicked lies Now, no sign of light, no sign of hope As a dark shadow enters her room A freezing chill runs down her spine The presence of death fills the room The shadow encircles her, pale of fear Slowly draining the last drops of life Her last strength she forces through And cries out to the Lord she used to know Overwhelming light annihilates the dark Immediate rest fills her heart My dear child, come to Me I will restore you and embrace you with My love
