

Freedom Lessons

Flame

This is a story of abject freedom
Where we learn to love, fear, and trust Him
God who gave Himself
It all begins with a promise
When God places His name upon us (What does this mean?)
Over and over and over in the Scriptures
God's painting for us a picture (What's the picture of?)
Grace that will not run out
This is the story of God who is faithful
To overcome sin, death, and the devil
When on the cross He died (And then He rose again)
How so we might know that we are loved

Of course, the catechism has been a rite of passage forever. And the [?] to get to the promise.

This was a- an honestly brilliant project by Luther to sustain you in the Faith. It's really structured to kind of guide the Christian through the life in the Church. This isn't a handbook for doctrine. This is a handbook for life.

Everybody, in the U.S. at least, wants to be free and boasts about their individual decisions and all, but I get the impression that a lot of them are, maybe not imprisoned by guilt in their- in their consciousness, but they're imprisoned by fear of threats from outside and consequences for their actions. I think if we can somehow get this idea of being free from everything that makes us fear.

I guess I'd say a path to freedom
